PREVIOUS MEETINGS

In 2002 Vin Callcut and his wife Hilary moved into Alison House, No 50 Church Street, Broseley. Although a spacious family home in good repair, they decided to make some alterations and it was while these were being carried out that they realised the building had already undergone considerable changes. So Vin started doing some research and five years and a lot of restoration work later, he gave a talk to the Society in November on the history of the house and some of the families who had owned it.

Alison House, No 50 Church Street

The original house was built in 1713 by Richard Hartshorne, a carpenter of Broseley, and he and his descendants were to own it until 1884. In the meantime, various extensions and conversions had been carried out and when the estate was finally sold for £525.00 it consisted of Alison House itself as well as 'two cottages, garden, stable and hereditaments'.

The Hartshornes were a well known family in and around Broseley. One owner, a Dr Frederick Hartshorne, had at one time supplied water to the town for a nominal sum of £10.00 a year, but after the Council stopped paying had cut off the supply. In 1776 a John Hartshorne had bought a small share in the building of the Iron Bridge, while another Hartshorne, Charles, had for some years been the curate of Broseley.

In 1929, the house was bought by Charles Instone, who ran the butcher's shop next door and the slaughter house at the rear. He in turn gave it and the goodwill of the shop to his son Gerald, who now lives in Broseley on the site of the old slaughter house and who sold No 50 to the Callcuts in 2002.

Although Alison House is built very near to the street a seven foot wall hides much of it. Once behind this wall, it becomes obvious that the building was not originally just one house for a vertical line shows where at least two buildings have been joined at an angle of about 5°. The larger part of the present house lies to the left of this line and may have been formed from two smaller houses; it was also joined through to the shop on the left. At some stage the house was extended at the back, a large hall, reception and bedrooms being added.

When trying to understand the history of the house, the first thing done was to draw up floor plans showing the layout of rooms and chimneys and deciding which walls were loadbearing. This was a great help in trying to work out the changes which had been made.

The street door leads into what was probably the oldest part of the house, with a blocked up stairway on the left and a breakfast room on the right. Ahead is an oak beamed parlour which, once the concrete floor screed was removed, was seen to have a well worn but reparable floor of six inch red and black tiles. This was one of five rooms which had been used as a kitchen and Hilary and Vin were lucky enough to find and install an original 1886 cottage range made by the Coalbrookdale company.

A more recent kitchen off this room once had access to the butcher's shop next door and has a doorway to a steep, much modified flight of stairs to the first floor.

The Callcuts, however, decided that what had once been the doctor's dispensary would make a much better kitchen with a wall knocked through to the breakfast room, only to discover that there had already been a door there at some stage. While removing the modern fireplace in the breakfast room Vin found a very old cast iron hearth back. Dated 1618, it is mentioned in Randall's Broseley and its Surroundings as having come from Shirlett and being at the house of F H Hartshorne Esq. Another interesting find was a worn threshold stone, part of an old slate gravestone dated 26 June 1717, which formed part of the slate floor.

Having discussed the alterations in the old part of the house, Vin then turned his attention to the newer extension at the back which was architect designed and could have been the work of Edward Haycock (1790-1870) of Shrewsbury. The hallway is circular with Regency style doors and reception rooms to either side. A short passageway leading to the sitting room has a built-in Coalbrookdale wall safe and store cupboard which form part of an unusual corridor. According to Steve Dewhirst this type of corridor also occurs in other Broseley houses.

The sitting room itself is part of the single storey section of the house and was at one time used as a schoolroom. The fact that the brass furniture on the original box shutters is marked William Tonks & Son and dated 30 June 1869 may indicate when the extension was built.

The study leading off the hallway must have been built over the steps leading up from the cellar kitchen and, like the sitting room, is single storey.

CHRISTMAS 2007

Ron Miles kept members of the Society amused at their Christmas dinner which was held at the Lion Hotel

To the right of the fireplace is evidence of chimney flues suitable for a kitchen range. It is possible that the room had been designed as a kitchen to replace the cellar kitchen below and was one of five rooms to have seen such service!

The interesting thing about this room is the chimney flue arrangements. From the range fireplace in the cellar below the chimney splits into a V shape. One leg comes up near the present fireplace into the main chimney breast while the other comes up by the study doorway, missing the chimney altogether and surfacing just where the cellar steps used to be – an enigma so far unexplained! In the attic above this single storey room the chimney breast shows marks where a fireplace was once installed. Presumably it was once a two storey building.

Another enigma is the steep staircase up from the old kitchen. This has been much modified and at one time replaced the one that came straight up from the front door. Oddly, it has a curve at the top that directs it straight into the existing banisters.

Only the attics over the original house are accessible. With oak boarded floors and lime plastered walls these could well have been servants quarters and, later, bedrooms for boarding school pupils.

Of the two cellars, the larger was probably used as a kitchen, there being arches and flues for a kitchen range, a bakery oven and a laundry/brewery copper. During the war this cellar was used as an air raid shelter.

The much modified staircase leading directly into the banisters

At the end of his fascinating talk Vin summed up his research by saying that the earliest part of the house could date from around 1713 at which time it would have been part of the development of the Church Street trend for small groups of terrace houses and businesses. Later some of these houses would have been combined to make larger family homes, with No 50 in particular having been extended and modified significantly.

JANUARY MEETING

In January members enjoyed a fascinating evening when John Freeman shared his reminiscences of the Society's activities over the past two years. It had, said John, been an extraordinary period. Not only had there been a full programme of talks and lectures, there had also been two summer outings; a trip to Bristol to see Brunel's newly restored ss Great Britain and his Clifton suspension bridge, and a visit to North Wales along Telford's Holyhead Road to Llangollen where a nostalgic steam train ride was followed by a trip along the Llangollen Canal and over the Pontcysyllte aqueduct. This was followed by a visit to John Wilkinson's ironworks at Bersham.

These are just some of the photographs and drawings John showed which took his audience back over the happenings of the last two years.

THE DOWN WELL

In the November 2007 Newsletter it was reported that restoration work was being carried out on the Down Well which is situated off Dark Lane in Broseley.

This well, which at one time was the only public water source in Broseley, was originally built in 1885, and only then after considerable discussion by the Broseley Local District Board.

According to Derrick Pountney, who has researched the history, it was in 1876 that this Board met to discuss the supply of water to the town and negotiations were begun to bring water from the Mines Spout in Benthall. These proved fruitless, however, and in 1881 it was decided to try and source water from a different area.

In November of that year a shaft was sunk on the Hay Cop on land owned by a Mr Burnett. There water was found at a depth of 90 feet, quickly rising to a depth of 49 feet. A previously sunk shaft on land owned by Mr R Instone was also located, the new shaft opening up a supply from this shaft. This water was analysed and its purity approved.

The following year a proposal was made to build a tank with a capacity of 40,000 gallons at the back of the Down Well, although it took another two years of negotiations before the owner, General Jenkins, could be persuaded to sell the land on which the tank would be sited. In 1885 the Down Well, with its three holding chambers, was finally built.

According to Derrick, however, the story does not end there. In due course a hand pump was sited near the top of Clench Acre to bring water from the Down Well closer to the centre of the town. However, by the time it reached the Clench Acre the quality of the water had deteriorated and it was deemed unusable for public consumption.

The well itself, nonetheless, still provided a source of drinkable water for many years, and it is said that one old woman used to go around the town with a yoke and buckets of water which she would sell for a halfpenny, while James Hurdley of E Davis Ironmongers in the High Street remembers being sent by his mother to collect buckets of water from the well during the hard winter of 1947 when all other water sources in the town were frozen.

The well has now undergone major refurbishment and Adrian Miles, whose idea it was to restore the well, says that the outer brick skin has now been completed and a new door at the far end fitted; an inspection window will shortly be installed. A battery powered interior light for occasional use has also been fitted.

In December divers explored the interior of the three chambers, declaring them to still be in excellent condition. The depth of the water was measured at approximately 3.5 metres. Perhaps to the disappointment of the interested crowd, the divers found no skeletons, only a flaxen haired doll. She was left sitting on one of the ledges, like the mermaid one of the divers had hoped she might have been!

Divers found no skeletons in the Down Well, only a flaxen haired doll

Work is now well advanced in clearing the site down the valley and restoring the holding pool. The project has the support of local schools which hope to use the area for school projects.

A Hay Cop Conservation Fund has now been set up and is actively seeking financial aid to complete this project. Anyone who would like to make a donation, or is interested in helping in any way, should contact Adrian Miles on 01952 882318.

OBITUARY

Newsletter was saddened to hear of the death in early January of Natalie Hodgson, the Lavender Lady of Astley Abbots. A member of the Society, 95 year old Natalie had been looking forward to attending the January meeting.

Natalie first came to Shropshire with her family in 1952. She very soon became a County Councillor, serving as an Independent for many years. After the death of her husband in 1989 she ran a PYO lavender farm in the grounds of their home as well as managing an apiary of some twenty hives.

A lady of many talents, she wrote her first book at the age of 93. Fateful Beauty was the true story of Frances Coke whose father, Sir Edward Coke, introduced the Petition of Rights into Parliament.

David Lake, who knew her and her family well, remembers her with affection and admiration.

At 95 Natalie Hodgson was still very active and was marvellous company – clever, well-informed and generous. Her ancestry included the Dundonalds (Mad Lord Dundonald of the Tuckies and the distillation of coal) and in the early years of the Wilkinson Society had contributed a talk on John Wilkinson.

Unable to come on the 2007 visit to Llangollen and Pontcysyllte, Ray Johnston and I took her for a memorable day out to the great aqueduct. As we followed her across she was giving encouraging words to people walking the other way, some of them 90 years younger than she but who were looking apprehensively at the drop to the river below us.

She had been a schoolgirl at Sherborne and subsequently a student at the Sorbonne before going to Dresden for her “smattering of German” as she modestly described it. During the war she was at Woburn Abbey producing black propaganda to mislead the Germans; she said that after a few years of this one’s idea of what was truth tended to become a bit shaky.

After the war Natalie moved to Astley Abbots with her husband Benji. As well as producing their three children and their spectacular garden, she worked as a children’s librarian in Wolverhampton and became a well know expert on beekeeping.

We have been privileged to know her and will miss her very much.

SOCIETY ARTEFACTS

The Society has a considerable collection of artefacts which it has acquired over the years but, with nowhere to display them, these are currently in storage. Now, however, following his suggestion in the November 2006 Newsletter, Robbie Pickles has begun making a photographic archive of these and will be displaying them on the website.

BROSELEY IN BLOOM

Last year Broseley's entry in the Britain in Bloom Heart of England competition reaped impressive results when, for the second year running, the judges gave the town a Gold Award. In addition, Broseley was named Overall Winner in the Small Town category and was presented with a beautiful glass vase.

Broseley was Overall Winner in the Small Town category as well as being awarded a Gold for the second successive year

This year, in their aim to make it a hat trick, Broseley Bloomers will be picking up on the Royal Horticultural Society's theme of Local Roots and linking in with the Society's celebration of the 200th anniversary of the death of John Wilkinson.

As a reflection of this, the floral colour scheme throughout the town will be bright oranges, reds and yellows – the colour of furnaces against the night sky. The judges will also be taken to see the plaque which is to be installed at The Lawns as well as made aware of the pageant which will be staged in July.

BOOKSHOP

Much Wenlock Racecourse by David Cole, 16 pp A5 booklet, illustrated.

This booklet traces the history of Much Wenlock Racecourse from around 1733 to its eventual closure in 1939. First sited at Westwood Common outside the town, in 1807 it fell victim to the Land Enclosure Act and was moved to a new site along the Bridgnorth road. As interest in flat racing declined, however, the course was rebuilt for steeple chasing with one of the annual events being a Hunter's Plate of Fifty Pounds offered by Lord Forester.

The booklet also includes reminiscences from local residents, one person recalling the race when the second placed runner, Tipperary Tim, came in 15 lengths behind the winner. That same horse, however, subsequently won the Grand National – albeit the only horse to finish without a fall!

Available from David Cole, 01952 728861, price £2.70.

Transactions of the Wrekin Local Studies Forum 2007, covering the Proceedings of the Thomas Telford Day School 8 September 2007, edited by Neil Clarke. Reviewed by David Lake.

Barrie Trinder contributes Thomas Telford in Perspective, a brief but brilliant introduction which counsels care in our evaluation of the great man's autobiography. Roger White writes about Telford as an archaeologist and emphasises that although Telford's excavation at Uriconium was meticulous, he could not be expected to see matters as would a present day archaeologist.

Telford's improvements to Holyhead Road in East Shropshire are the subject of Neil Clarke's detailed and helpful article, which includes Telford's failure to convince Shrewsbury that the bypassing of the town by a direct route from Ketley to Chirk would be an improvement.

Shelagh Lewis gives an interesting account of St Michael's Church in Madeley designed by Telford, whose engineering judgement was evidently economical; he designed the tower for a peal of six bells and a well intentioned post war increase to eight brought structural problems.

Chris Morris's Photographing Telford's Legacy is spectacularly beautifully illustrated; this alone would make the acquisition of a copy of these Proceedings very desirable.

Price £4.50, which includes postage, available from Neil Clarke, Cranleigh, Wellington Road, Little Wenlock, TF6 5BH, tel: 01952 504135. Cheques should be made payable to Wrekin Local Studies Forum.

I should appreciate any information your readers may have on my uncle, William Smith, who was born in Broseley on 5 September 1910. He was a miner and moved with his brother to South Wales. I understand that their father was a professional footballer in the late 1890s.

Colin Smith

colin.smith2@ukonline.co.uk

I am looking for details of an ancestor born in Broseley, Monmouthshire, in 1811. Would your Broseley be the same one? I am trying to get hold of his birth certificate and would be grateful if you could tell me which registrar covers Broseley.

Tracy Barham

tracy.barham@bt.com

Our Broseley is in Shropshire and is a long way from Monmouthshire. There will be no birth certificate as registers of births were not introduced until 1837. The christening would be recorded in the parish registers and for Broseley these are held at Shropshire Archives.

Steve Dewhurst

Whilst visiting family and friends in the area two years ago I came upon Daly Cottage near the Honeypot. I was also taken on a walk to Thrift Wood which is superb and which I have chosen to make the focal point of my final year's study for my Art Degree. I intend to take photographs of this area throughout the changing seasons and also, hopefully, follow the brook from its start to its entry into the Severn. Does anyone know anything about the area that could help me with research, in particular the Honeypot?

Tony Hyett

I know the area called Darley quite well and I can understand your fascination. It is a little like the land that time forgot. It is part of the Willey Estate and I assume that it has been left to decay because of the lack of road access. At one time it was a small hamlet. You can still find the sites of the houses as lumps in the landscape.

Steve Dewhirst

I read in the November 2007 Newsletter of a Hartshorne watch offered on ebay. It led me to wonder whether any Hartshorne records survived, particularly of apprenticeships. My paternal grandfather, George Howells, was a watchmaker, apparently surfacing in the trade in Broad Street, Hanley. He was born on 12 December 1873 in Broseley Wood.

Richard Howells

I am not aware of any Hartshorne records surviving although they were quite a large clan. The best place to try is Shropshire Archives. There seems to be very little information on watch and clockmakers in Broseley.

Steve Dewhirst

I belong to the Regional Furniture Society which researches regional traditions of furniture-making, and am looking for help on the history of two high quality pieces of oak furniture which were sold in 1990. They are a mule chest with the name Jane Corbett and the date 2 February 1657 and a panelled chair with the name Thomas Corbett and the date 1657. They have many common decorative features and are likely to have been made by the same craftsman.

According to the Familysearch website Jane (Eves) and Thomas Corbett were married on 2 February 1657 in Broseley, Shropshire, and it is therefore reasonable to assume that the pieces were made for this couple.

I should like to find out if anything was known locally about them. The pieces would have been expensive so the family may have left some trace. The Corbett pieces are particularly important since, as most furniture lacks documentation, that would allow its regional origins to be traced.

I have also read that Benthall Hall was in a Catholic area, presumably when it was built. I wonder whether these Corbetts would have been Catholics.

Christopher Pickvance

There were Corbetts in Broseley notably at the Dean. The better known Corbetts were large landowners in the Marches and owned Moreton Corbet house.

I think it unlikely they were Catholics as the son-in-law of Richard Corbett of the Dean, who died in 1684, was rector of Willey. However there were ten papists in Broseley in 1676 so it is possible.

Randall does state:

By the middle of the 16th century Willey had passed into the hands of the old Catholic family of the Lacons one of whom, Sir Rowland, held it in 1561, together with Kinlet; and from them it passed to Sir John Weld, who is mentioned as of Willey in 1666. He married the daughter of Sir George Whitmore and his son, George Weld, sat for the county with William Forester, who married the daughter of the Earl of Salisbury, and voted with him in favour of the succession of the House of Hanover.

Steve Dewhirst

I read in your February 2007 Newsletter that a Norman Wyke remembered a family of gypsies named Locke – his description could very well be that of ‘my’ Lockes whom I have been trying to track down for years.

I know for certain that they travelled in the Shropshire area, that they managed to avoid any contact with the law, that they traded in horses and that they travelled in horse drawn caravans with other families named Shevlin, Boswell and Finney. Also that they used the surname of Price and Thomas as well as that of Locke and Davies! The family consisted of James (Jim) and his wife, Jane Locke, and anything up to eight or ten children.

I should appreciate knowing if Norman Wyke’s remembered Lockes are also my Lockes! This is the first time I have ever come across anyone who might have known the family and I just can't pass by this opportunity!

Jill Hartwright

The family of Lockes which I remember came from near Church Stretton (about 18 miles from Broseley). They used to come round the area in their caravan and help with threshing while the women would go door to door selling wooden pegs. A catchphrase in the area was that they would 'skin a rabbit for ninepence'. It was the job of the children to look after the horses as they grazed along the roadside. There was also a family of Lockes in nearby Astley Abbots.

Norman Wyke

I am the third great granddaughter of Thomas Baugh, b 1796, Broseley, child of John and Sarah Baugh. I would like to hire a researcher to learn more of this family. I would also like to purchase the Pedigree of the Baugh Family from 1707 dated 1826, reference # 731/2/2513.

The best people to contact are the Shropshire Family History Society <http://www.sfhs.org.uk/> as they are the experts in this field. I am not familiar with the book but there may be a copy at Shropshire Archives.

I am keen to learn more about two relatives who lived in the Broseley area in the 1700s, both called Joseph Broadmeadow. Because this is a very rare name, and since the family was to be found at Enville in Staffordshire, any Broadmeadow linked to Broseley, Ironbridge or Coalbrookdale would certainly be related to me.

I have records of a Joseph Broadmeadow taking a mortgage on a house at Buildwas in 1756 and his son, also Joseph, was born about 1753 and married an Elisabeth Simmonds at Broseley in 1777.

Alan Broadmeadow

Broadmeadow is certainly an unusual name and I can find no record of them in Broseley amongst the items that I have collected. The fact that your Joseph took out a mortgage suggests that he had a reasonable income. Buildwas is mainly agricultural and did not have particularly close links with Broseley.

I assume that Elisabeth was his second wife. Simmons was a name local to Broseley with a number being shown in the early registers (see the website). The family is also shown in various 19th century censuses (available on Ancestry). In later times there are a couple of mentions of Simmons in the local papers (also available on the website).

I could not find any history on the Forester Arms pub on your website. I wonder if you have any ideas where I could find out even the basics such as when it was built and who used it?

Selina Graham

*The main reason we do not have many details of the pubs of Broseley on our website is that they are covered in the book Inns and Alehouses of Broseley by Dave Shinton which was published in 1993. The extract below is from this book.*

The Forester Arms . . . was first licensed in 1820, although I gather that a building is shown on this site on the Broseley Estate map of 1728. . . .

. . . The first licensing of the house, parts of which appear to predate 1820, may be associated with Cecil Weld Forester being raised to the peerage by George IV in 1821. It stands close to the centre of mediaeval Broseley, . . . (and) the importance of the inn must have grown with the opening of The Avenue in 1828 as a direct link from the Iron Bridge to the Bridgnorth turnpike. The first coach ran along this road on 18th November 1828.

The Forester Arms today

. . . Lord Forester owned the property in 1838 and it still belongs to the estate. . . . A building at the rear is still referred to as the Forester's Room. Here tenants came on rent days and on occasions a breakfast was held.

The pub does not seem to be mentioned very much in the newspapers so the landlords must have kept an orderly house.

Steve Dewhirst

The Forester Arms is currently being renovated and is said to be opening as a Thai restaurant.

Following Lavinia Mitchell's request for information on George Potts in the November 2007 Newsletter, John Francis has sent in this undated photograph of a George Potts, together with an obituary which appeared in 1946. This George Potts, however, was born in 1866 and died in 1945.

According to this obituary, George Potts qualified as a solicitor in 1892 and worked with his father until the latter's death in 1911. He then practised on his own account and in 1934 took over the family practice. He was also registrar of Madeley County Court until 1939 when he resigned due to ill health.

He was a keen sportsman and his greatest enjoyment was fox hunting when he would follow the hounds on foot, often with John's father Tom. He was also interested in botany and entomology and had an abiding interest in the whole world of nature.
