G12. Upper part of memorial

If e'er perfection was in woman found,
In her who sleeps beneath it did abound.
In every duty strict she pass'd through life,
A friend, acquaintance, and beloved wife.
By all endearing - and by all adored,
As she respect'd liv'd she dy'd deplored
Great however her friends, and Husband's grief.
This sovereign balm to all should yield relief.
She is hence forth blest in Heaven's eternal sphere.
Then why repine so short her misery here,
Death's hasty summons was but God's decree
To let such Virtue from more suffering free.

G12. Lower part of memorial

As nothing is more certain and inevitable than death, so nothing is more uncertain than the time, the place, the manner and all other circumstances of our death, it is certain that we must one day part with this mortal body, but when shall that day be, shall it be suddenly or on notice given we know not.

*How short of time! how swift our minutes fly!
How just th' advice prepare O man to die.*
